PICTURED AN ORDINARY GIRL.

Woman Writer Explains From What Type She Drew Heroine.

Kate Jordan, the author of "Time, the Comedian," was asked by a seeker after knowledge why it was that the modern school of women writers all take for their heroines a girl of backbone and of steadfast purpose.

"The girl heroine," said this critic, "never discovers that she is beautiful until she is 26."

"My heroine knew just how she looked, but she didn't care. After she fell in love she began to care a lot. That is right and natural. You seem to think women naturally are dishonest. What less could a girl do in common honesty than my heroine did? Having money that she didn't want on account of its associations, and that she was not entitled to, she labored to restore it. Hundreds of men are doing that thing every day, laboring honestly to repay their debts, and yet you seem to think it remarkable that a woman does it."

DEPARTURE OF THE DEPARTED.

Caller Accepted Commonplace Statement Too Literally.

In many rural districts there is usually one accommodating man, who is called upon, gratuitously, too, to shave when necessary, those who depart this life. The writer remembers this custom as in vogue at Plymouth, Me., a small town off the railway in Penobscot county, and a gentleman by the name of Blanchard was usually sought at such times.

One day an old gentleman had passed away and Mr. Blanchard was sent for; the messenger, being in a hurry himself, thought the occasion demanded more signs of activity on Mr. Blanchard's part, and expressed his mind to that effect to which he received the reply: "Well, he can wait, can't he?"

Very soon, however, the shaving kit was gathered up and a start for the work was made. When the house was reached the daughter of the departed one, thinking the call was made to inquire her father's condition, came to the door and said: "Well, father has gone."

"Gone! Where in h—l has he gone? I came over to shave him," replied Mr. Blanchard.—Boston Herald.

Artificial Storm at Sea.

The inhabitants of Aboukir, near Alexandria, were recently treated to a wonderful spectacle. It became necessary to destroy some sixteen tons of powerful dynamite, and the explosives—sufficient to blow up a town—were taken to sea and placed below the water. Something like a submarine earthquake followed the explosion, which was heard for miles around. A waterspout shot into the air to a height of 2,000 feet, and fell back in drizzling spray. Simultaneously the sea became a whirlpool of seething water, as if agitated by a hurricane.

Distributing the Scriptures.

In China last year the British and Foreign Bible society distributed over 1,000,000 copies of the scriptures. During the same period 350,000 books were given away among the soldiers and sailors of Russia and Japan.

Sizing Them Up.

"I don't care what you say about the Swellmans; they're certainly the cream of society."

"I guess you're right. At any rate the milk of human kindness seems to be beneath them."

Obv'us Enough.

As people get educated they find the dulness of little villages intolerable; they long for something to look at, if it's only a street fight or a penny gaff; and they're no longer content to work all the hours there are for 14s a week, to be racked with rheumatism at forty, and to end in the workhouse. The causes are obvious enough.—Liverpool (Eng.) Mercury.

Gaining Worldly Fortune.

Prosperity is consistent with intense worldliness, intense selfishness, intense hardness of heart; while the grander features of human character—self-sacrifice, disregard of pleasure, patriotism, love of knowledge, devotion to any great and good cause—these have no tendency to bring what is called fortune.—te.
